Special topics courses generally meet one of the following requirements:

- The course is being offered on a specific topic of interest to students who have requested such a course
- A faculty member is interested in offering a course on a special topic
- A course is being piloted to see if there may be sufficient interest to add the course to the regular curriculum

Not every discipline has been approved to offer special topics courses; if approval has been granted, then the catalog has listed course numbers specifically designated as special topics courses for that discipline.

All special topics courses will have numbers assigned to them that are either 292-295 (for a lower-level course) or 492-495 (for an upper-level course). Special topics courses may be from 1 to 6 credit hours.

Before a special topics course can be approved, a syllabus with a course outline of sufficient detail to permit an accurate evaluation of the course content must be submitted; the syllabus must also include the textbook or other resources to be used as well as evaluation methods.

For a special topics course to fulfill any requirements (general education, honors, writing-enhanced, diversity, Bible, major, or minor), appropriate approval must be sought before the course is offered.

Before a special topics course can be placed on the schedule, the attached form must be completed and the appropriate signatures received. Once all relevant signatures have been received, the course has been approved; academic council action is not required.

Special topics courses are approved for one semester only. To offer the course again as a special topics course, the same approval process must be used. If a special topics course becomes a regular course, it must go through the same approval process as a regular course.

When special topics courses are offered, the specific name of the course is entered on the students’ schedules and transcripts.
